TO DROP OLD ROAD DEPUTY

David C. Wainwright will not be deputy road supervisor under the John Wilson administration.

This is not on account of any fault with the veteran road builder, but Wilson has decided to abolish altogether the office held by Mr. Wainwright, regarding it as unnecessary and a useless waste of good money.

In a rearrangement of the offices of the bureau, however, Wainwright will be offered another position. It is Wilson's intention to have two cantoniers—one for each district of Honolulu—with a staff of three or four men each, to clean and repair storm sewers and drains, and Wainwright will be offered one of these positions.

Charles Costa has already retired. When informed that his position would be given to another man tomorrow, he packed up and quit. Keawehau took charge of the government stables on Saturday.

Wilson had his first job on Saturday in Palolo valley, renewing the bridge which had been washed away. The old men of the road department were off duty, and, for lack of carpenters, Mr. Wainwright wanted to put the job off until Monday. This, however, did not suit Wilson. He gathered up some men, went to Palolo and by nightfall had the bridge up again.

Wilson states that he will make no changes in the working force of the department, employing the same men which he has found there. The only changes will be of a few heads of different classes of work he believing that he can secure the services of better men, in some instances, for these positions.
